Essential Mental Health Care Expanded for Montana's Youth

Many people rely on Providence St. Patrick Hospital in Missoula, Montana, for essential psychiatric and behavioral health services. In a state where these services are in high demand, organizations like St. Patrick Hospital play a critical role – and highlight the need to create better access to quality mental health care.

Youth are a particularly vulnerable population with unique mental and behavioral health needs. Untreated conditions can have serious long-term effects, including impacts to physical well-being, education and social development.

Seeing a need to expand psychiatric and behavioral health services to more young people in the region, the Neurobehavioral Medicine department at St. Patrick Hospital set out to remodel and grow its existing unit. Despite the challenges of 2020, the expansion, which included remodeling an entire floor, was completed on time, doubling the unit's capacity. Now, more adolescents have access to intensive inpatient or outpatient behavioral health services that help get them on a stable path toward recovery.

“ I am grateful every day to our dedicated team of caregivers and community partners for their resilience through 2020. Access to mental health services is more important than ever. Together with our local partners, we are addressing the needs of our community members and living out our vision to create health for a better world. ”
