

Providence Employees Who Attend School Clinicals at Providence

There are a few considerations for Providence Employees who do clinicals for nursing school.

- Even though you are an employee, you still need to go through the student affiliation process, sign the confidentiality documents and complete the student education requirements.
 - You will be functioning differently as a student than in your employed role, we need to have regulatory documents in your student file that show that you understand and agree to meet Providence requirements.
- You must not use your employee Epic login to document in the patient record.
 - You will be provided a student login to documents in Epic. This login identifies you as a student and allows you different access in Epic. It is tempting to use the logins you use for work, but it ends up causing issues. Please use your student login & password.
- Please do not use your employee ID badge to perform glucose testing when functioning in your role as student
 - After you have been through the student competency process (which will be a repeat if you perform blood glucose testing as an employee), your seven digit phone number (without area code) is the number used for student clinicals. You will need to generate a barcode with your student glucose meter access number & tape it to the back of your student ID badge.
 - website <http://www.barcodesinc.com/generator/index.php>
- Please do not use your employee badge to enter areas that are restricted to students
 - Again, this causes potential downstream legal repercussions. If your student badge restricts you from entering an area, please do not override the built in security systems by using your employee badge.
- Legal concerns:
 - It isn't fun to consider, but healthcare is a very litigious environment. As a Providence employee, if you are involved in an incident that results in legal action you would be represented by Providence legal counsel. As a student, you would be represented by your school. Therefore, we need you to meet all of the same requirements as non-Providence students...even if it is a repeat of content you received as an employee.