providence diversi’TEES’

From April 1 to 17, the Archives aired its clean laundry at the System Office with the premier showing ofprovidence diversi’TEES’. The exhibit showcased tee-shirts and other articles of clothing created to celebrate new facilities or programs, anniversaries, health fairs and other events in the Providence Health System.

Forty items from the Archives textile collection were selected for this exhibit. On display were colorful shirts, jackets, a baby romper, and an infant’s tee-shirt, along with hats dangling overhead and a Providence High School “student” modeling a sweatsuit and team cap. Small paper “tees” clipped with mini-clothespins served as labels, providing institution identification and dates.

The earliest exhibited items date from the 1960s, but the majority are from the 1980s and 1990s paralleling the increasing popularity of casual dress. Whether used for marketing, employee recognition, team building or just plain fun, the creative designs, colors and slogans reflect the diversity of the Health System and its employees.

Above: Three popular items: a purple romper from Providence WeeCare (Portland), a child-size ‘tee’ from the 75th Anniversary of Providence Hospital (Everett), and a tiny shirt for newborns boasting “I got my first hug at Providence Medical Center” (Seattle).

Left: The shirts were secured to exhibit panels and placed in a well-traveled lobby at the System Office. Sixteen institutions were represented, along with the System Office, the Sisters of Providence, and Providence Associates.
VISITING THE ROSE CITY

In May, Loretta Greene and Terri Mitchell traveled to Portland to attend the Northwest Archivists annual conference at which Loretta participated in a panel discussion concerning assistance to researchers. The trip to Portland was a perfect opportunity to visit several of the Portland Service Area institutions.

Heading south on I-5, Providence Centralia Hospital was our first stop. Sister Carolyn Koreski, Sister Representative/Patient Advocate, provided a cook’s tour of the newly expanded facility, which includes the Rosary Manor skilled nursing center. Of special interest were the recently installed historical exhibits found in the main lobby and throughout the corridors. A photo collage with small artifact display windows highlights the blending of the history and mission of St. Helen Hospital, Chehalis (formerly operated by the Sisters of St. Dominic, Edmonds, WA), Centralia General Hospital, and Providence. Our textile collection expanded when Sister Carolyn donated a set of green scrubs marked with the Providence logo, a sample of the much-dreaded patient’s gown, and a “Paint The Town” tee-shirt from the hospital’s annual community service event.

The following day, whirlwind tours of Providence St. Vincent Medical Center, Providence Portland Medical Center, Emilie House, and Providence Child Center were equally informative. Sydney Clevenger and Carolyn Winter (St. Vincent’s), Denece Boyer (Providence), Sisters Florida Hinse and Alexis Melancon (Emilie House), and Mary Holstein and Shoshana Grammer (Child Center) graciously showed us their facilities and answered our questions. Again, we came away with some interesting memorabilia and a few historical artifacts to add to the Archives collection.

In addition, at each institution we discussed the need for guidance in the retention of non-current records and the preservation of historical records and artifacts. This will be a future project to coordinate with records administrators.

The nature of archival work gives us insight into the activities of an institution, but these tours gave us a real feel for the unique spirit and atmosphere alive in each ministry. One of the best outcomes was meeting the public relations, development and administrative personnel with whom we are frequently in contact as we all work to preserve and make known the ministry and history of the Sisters of Providence Health System.
